

WHERE WE WORK

Preventive Care at Queens-Long Island Medical Group

Garden City, NY • They're already the biggest in the state, now Queens-Long Island Medical Group (QLIMG) is striving to be the best.

Though founded in 1991 as a private physicians group, the group has been in practice for more than 50 years, previously operating under the Health Insurance Plan (HIP) of Greater New York banner, said Louise Malone, MBA, BS, RN, chief operating officer.

Ask Malone what sets QLIMG apart from the competition, and she zooms in on its "sizable" reputation. With 22 medical offices and more than 350 primary and specialty-care physicians, QLIMG provides dedicated care to more than 200,000 patients annually in the Queens-Nassau-Suffolk region.

"Our focus is on well-being and preventive care," she said. "It is the future in medicine. Preventive care in the outpatient setting is a very exciting arena for nurses."

A nurse since 1971, Malone said the company has much to offer her peers. "The options are limitless," she said.

QLIMG currently has a complement of 40 nurses, and it hopes to double that number during the next year, specifically looking for nurses with solid instincts and keen eyes.

"We want someone who is proactive — someone to be supportive to the doctor in managing patients' care," she said. "The new electronic medical record provides a great tool for managing care."

"We are committed to emerge a leader in this electronic era, and also to build our services to provide excellent ambulatory care," she said.

QLIMG has two open positions for oncology nurses and is looking for primary care and pediatric nurses. ■

Nurses interested in applying should contact Martha I. Vormittag, MS, at 516-941-4093, ext. 5193, or e-mail her at mvormittag@qlimg.com.
